

Top picture shows some of the building activity that was underway at the Provost and District Museum this month as the addition of a mezzanine takes place in the latest 4,000 square foot extension of the building. The mezzanine is being created on both the south (above) and north walls with each raised area supplying an extra 800 square feet to display historical items. Norris Pahlke (left) who is president of the Provost and District Museum told The Provost News that the museum is considering creating spaces to showcase some more of the various early businesses along Main Street.
