

Finding Light in the Dark

When daylight slides into night, a variety of activities emerge as these pictures show some at work or play across—and even in the land.

©PROVOST NEWS PHOTOS.

The moon quickly climbs up the sky before the sun can completely set.

Canadian geese get ready to wing their way south after feasting on the remnants of a farmer's crop.

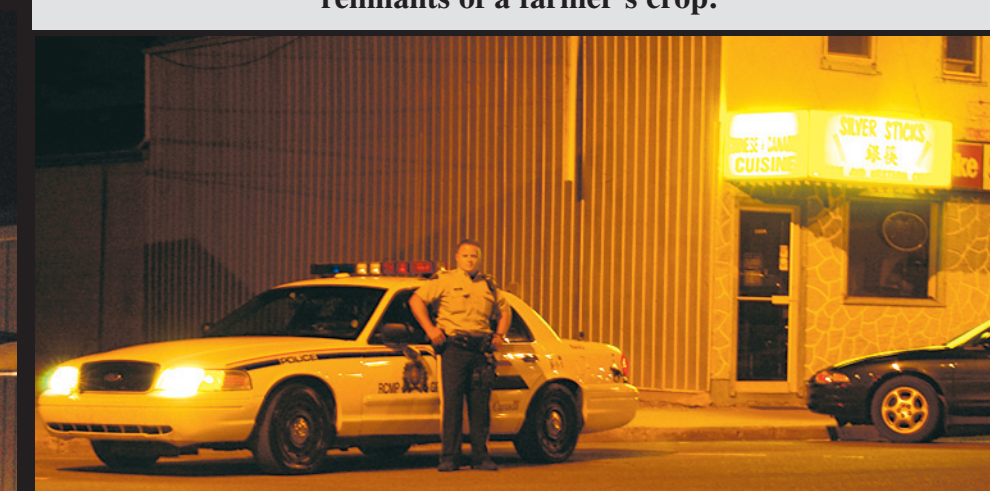

Intermission at St. Norbert's restored church means a breath of fresh air for some as a Juno award winner visits. The largest Neo-Gothic church in rural Alberta was built in 1922.

Local visitors hit the road and peer deep into an empty coal mine —before all the lights are turned off for a minute.

Hamlet of Cadogan guests finish supper at 100th anniversary celebrations and move into the hall for live entertainment.

RCMP constable Corey Hunt on Main Street.

A youngster stands by the theatre door as adults get ready to come back outside.

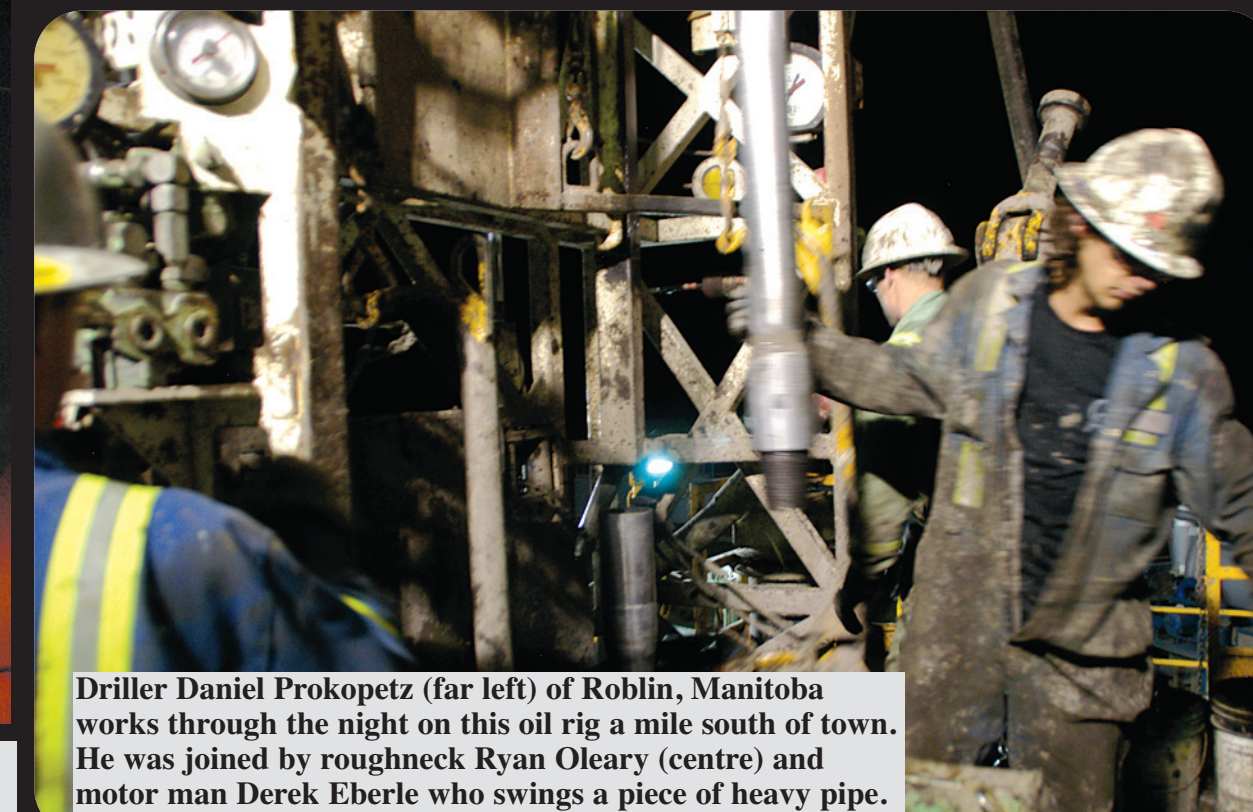

One of three combines in a field gobbles up the crop as the lights from Provost can be seen a few miles away in the background.

Several women celebrate an upcoming wedding.

Myron Ganser had only 15 minutes left on a field south of Provost before he had to move his combine to the yard and dig out giant wrenches.

Driller Daniel Prokopetz (far left) of Roblin, Manitoba works through the night on this oil rig a mile south of town. He was joined by roughneck Ryan O'leary (centre) and motor man Derek Eberle who swings a piece of heavy pipe.